The challenge

Paying too much for too little

An international infrastructure firm is using an expensive video conferencing system to support its mobile workforce.

With hundreds of employees out in the field, collaboration and effective communication are both crucial to the company's success.

communications with a wide range of business apps, including a customised HR system.

Decision-makers at the firm need to reduce costs, but also find a way to integrate their

The solution

Teamwork at the touch of a button

By using our solution, the firm could seamlessly deploy a new unified communications system within 90 days.

As video conferencing is already included in our offering, the firm could stop paying for online meetings as a separate feature, but also take advantage of phone calls, messaging and file-sharing all being in one place.

This way, the firm can boost collaboration. On-site teams could easily keep up to date with engineers and quickly resolve problems. Issues that normally take a day to resolve would take up to an hour.

Our solution's open APIs also makes integrating with the firm's existing tools and apps a seamless, pain-free process.

The benefits

Stronger teams – and for less

- Improved collaboration through unified video, phone, messaging and file-sharing
- Improved productivity as issues with plans or blueprints are now easier to resolve
- Reduced costs as video conferencing isn't charged as a separate service
- Seamless integration with current and future business apps
